

I. ATA 686: Labor and Labor Organizations in a Comparative Perspective

This course deals with the history and theory of labor process and labor organizations in the period following the Industrial Revolution. Main areas explored include the historical changes in the structure of employment and patterns of work, meaning and composition of the working class, labor unions and the challenges they currently face in different societies, as well as workers and unions in Turkey in a comparative perspective.